1. The human rights of women aim at eliminating the discrimination, exclusion and violence meted against women globally. Women's rights have strong correlation with the concept of feminism as a cultural and political force. Feminism itself is a broad based and diverse campaign which seeks to protect and promote the interests of women in every part of the world. Feminist movements also actively link women's rights to the empowerment of women and eradication of poverty. This is because, poverty can be interpreted in a wide sense, as including not just a lack of financial and social resources, but an exclusion from health care, legal services and civic life. Generally, women work longer hours than men, with at least half the total time spent in unremunerated labour. This invisibility leads to 'lower social entitlements to women as compared to men. This situation engenders gender inequality by perpetuating gender gap in accessing limited resources.
