

Programmes designed to offer services to victims as they recover from the crime and continue through the criminal justice process is called a victim assistance

Parity of treatment in the administration of justice demands the maintenance of a complete balance in the scale of justice

At the heart of most restorative justice schemes is the participation of victims

The victim has the right to attend and participate in the criminal justice proceedings

A victim survey is used to measure the extent and pattern of victimization in a group

The UN Declaration mandates the State to provide compensation for the victim when is unavailable from the offender

Punishment at customary law was meant to uphold and to uphold veneration of the sacred institutions of the community and group solidarity

Secondary crime victims experience the harm vicariously such as through media accounts or from watching television

In 1995, the UN General Assembly adopted the Declaration on the basic principles of justice for victims of crime and abuse of power

The object of compensation is to heal the injury inflicted by crime