

damage to one of the following nerves:
Brachial plexus

[NSC505] When laceration of the cervix occurs during delivery, the midwife quickly does the following to arrest haemorrhage before the cervix is sutured:
Holds the lacerated portion with sponge holding forceps

[NSC505] Exchange blood transfusion is a life-saving procedure in:
Severely affected haemolytic disease of the new born

[NSC505] Which of the following is the most serious sign of fetal distress?
Meconium-stained liquor

[NSC505] Multiple sexual partners is the risk factor for one of the following:
Cervical cancer

[NSC505] The major cause of cord prolapse is:
Ill-fitting presenting part into the lower uterine segment

[NSC505] The term 'floppy baby'
Loss of muscular activity

[NSC505] In a full term baby who has physiological jaundice, the level of unconjugated bilirubin never exceeds:
12-13 mg/dl

[NSC505] Excessive delay in the delivery of the fetal head may cause:
Severe hypoxia

[NSC505] During induction of labour, the midwife must watch carefully for:
Tonic uterine contraction

Whatsapp: 08089722160 or click here for TMA assistance

Practice E-exams & Chat with course mates on noungeeks.net