

For _____, behaviour is a function of its consequences
Skinner

An _____ may employ an entrepreneurial approach due to its comparatively smaller size and scope of operations, as well as possessing fewer resources
SME (Small and Medium Enterprise)

_____, a cofounder of general system theory and "systems" thinking, looked to nature to uncover the hard facts of soft social systems
Boulding,

The cognitive model came about as a reaction to the other models of human behaviour
In particular, pioneering psychologists such as Edward Tolman became disenchanted with the psychoanalytic and early _____ models behaviouristic

The roots of behaviouristic school of thought can be traced to the work of _____ and Watson
Pavlov

_____ are systems capable of self-maintenance based on a throughput of resources from its environment, such as a living cell
Open System

On the basis of _____ classic law of effect, the behaviourist model would say that organisational behaviour followed by a positive or reinforcing consequence will be strengthened and increase in subsequent frequency
Thorndike's

The major functions of _____ managers relate to operational matters and, therefore, they rarely play an active role in strategic management middle-level

_____ are cybernetic systems capable of self-regulation in terms of some externally prescribed target or criterion, such as a thermostat thermostat

The _____ model can serve as the conceptual framework for the study of organisational behaviour
S-O-B-C