

The demographic methods for modeling population processes include _____
All of the above

The theory that argues that population grows geometrically is _____ theory
The Malthusian Theory

The statistical device for summarising the mortality experience of a population is described as _____
The life table

A population having moderate proportion of children and old persons and slow growth is referred to as _____ Stationary population

The study of components of variation and change in demographic variables and the relationships between is called _____
Demographic analysis

The factors that cause changes in population include the following except _____ Age

Indirect methods of collecting data are required in _____ countries
Developing

The term that addresses the relationship between population processes and demographic characteristics of populations such as the age and sex of a given population, the race and ethnicity of a population, their socioeconomic status, and education is called _____
Population Structure

Population distribution depends on which of these?
Environment

The phenomenon which addresses the relationship between population processes and demographic characteristics of populations such as the age and sex of a given population is called _____
Population Structure

Whatsapp: 08089722160 or click here for TMA assistance

Practice E-exams & Chat with course mates on noungeeks.net