

The term inferencing refers to one of the following options
Thinking beyond what has been said

A reader requires one of the following types of speed when reading for enjoyment.
Average

One of the following options is the term used to refer to a poor reader's tendency for going back to read what s/he has read before.
Regression

One of the following speed types requires a high level of concentration.
Slowest

Reading activity that requires getting a general idea from a material will require one of the following reading speed.
Fastest

The index of a book is found in one of these parts of the book.
Back

One of these aspects of a book can help a reader know its relevance.
Introduction

One of the following options is the function of blurb.
Gives a summary of the book

When a listener considers the strengths and weaknesses of what has been said, s/he is said to be involved in one of the following activities.
Critical analysis

A speaker can use constant repetition to accomplish one of the following in a presentation.
Draw attention to the main point