

The pursuit of armed conflict often involves the intentional destruction of field and forest with a view to depriving the enemy access to _____.
the components of the environment

_____ means a particular type of relationship in which one party tries to influence the behaviour of another in desired directions.

Deterrence

The specific phrase "human security" is most commonly associated with the 1994 UNDP _____ Report.

Human Development

Which of the following is not a form of security?

pathological security

People who are forced to flee from their homelands and seek safety in another country in order to escape persecution, death, or starvation are referred to as _____ refugees

The period of _____ has been generally considered to be a useful beginning for students of modern strategy.

Napoleonic warfare

Rush-Bagot agreement took place between the United States and Great Britain in _____ 1817

within the context of international political system, _____ rather than domestic state interests, determine patterns of great power interventions.

global cultural norms

Human security entails taking preventive measures to reduce vulnerability and _____.

minimize risk

At the international political system, _____ mostly seek to challenge the realist research program.

cultural theories